Autopsy: woman strangled

BLUE EARTH -- The unidentified woman whose body was found near Blue Earth Friday was strangled to death, according to an autopsy report issued today by the Ramsey County medical examiner. The cause of death was not released.

The woman, identified as Daisy White, age 25, was found in a cornfield near the town of Blue Earth. She was last seen alive on February 12, 1987.

District 77 adopts drug policy

By JON HOLTEN
Free Press Staff Writer

A program designed to improve drug education and provide more effective help for students with drug problems was unanimously adopted Monday night by the District 77 Board of Education.

The "student assistance policy" was developed through several months' work by a committee of school personnel, parents, drug counselors, policemen and other community residents.

In the area of drug education, the curriculum will be designed to promote positive health attitudes, and prepare students to make reasonable decisions on drug use.

Training will be provided in the training of teachers and staff members on how to implement the drug policy.

(See related article Page 21.)

Duplex

It's not something a zoning commission would approve, but this improvised high-rise seems to satisfy the local bird population at C.E. "Bud" Carlson's home near Seppman's Mill on Highway 60 west of Mankato. The upper tenant, a barn with a stone-and-mortar home. The two reportedly liv

The pride flies into Addie Malmrose's face as she talks about the in the early March, Mrs. Malmrose would like to see the

Mrs. Malmrose

Michael Larrson
Free Press Managing Editor

A MAJOR LISTER

"I saw it come. But I didn't think it was the best, and when she does it, she makes sure it's the best."